After our flight to Budapest, we drive to our guesthouse near Hortobagy National Park.

2-4 Birding in the Hortobagy area is a thrilling mix of raptors, geese, waterbirds, bustards, woodpeckers and even owls ... but it will be the cranes that steal the show!

This vast National Park is a mosaic of wetlands, marshes, woodlands and fields, with an exciting range of species, but by coming at this time of year we get to see thousands of Common Cranes coming to roost in the fading light. As the sun sets the Cranes gather in fields nearby, before flying into the roosting sites in large flocks, their bugling calls echoing round as they drop into the shallow lakes where they spend the night. It is a wonderful experience - especially if there is a red sky, when the cranes' silhouettes look particularly beautiful and worth the trip just to see this!

However - the supporting cast is incredible! A great selection of habitats includes huge reed-fringed fishponds where Marsh Harriers hunt and Bearded and Penduline Tits can be found. On the open water and meadows we'll check through flocks of White-fronted Geese for Bean Geese and the rare Red-breasted Goose - on most trips we find two or three! A small flock of Lesser White-fronted Geese winter here too, but can be harder to find. The lakes are worth checking for Ferruginous Duck and Red-crested Pochard and there are always a few Great White Egret, Pygmy Cormorant and Yellow-legged Gulls amongst the Caspian Gulls. We'll keep an eye out for European Tree Frogs and we've found Fire-bellied Toads and European Pond Terrapins too.

The whole area is fabulous for birds of prey. Buzzards are everywhere but cold weather further

"By adding another day in the Bukk Hills, we have increased our chances of several birds, including Ural Owl and woodpeckers, with Middle and Lesser Spotted, Grey-headed, Black and with luck even White-backed Woodpecker all possible. If we are very lucky, Wallcreeper and Alpine Accentor may have already arrived for the winter." Roy Atkins north may have already pushed Rough-legged Buzzards and Hen Harriers into the Hortobagy for the winter. We should see Eastern Imperial Eagle, Saker Falcon, Peregrine and Merlin, with a very slim chance of Greater Spotted Eagle. There is a small outlying population of Long-legged Buzzard here and White-tailed Eagles are common.

In an area of steppe country known as the Puszta, we shall look for Great Bustards. Syrian Woodpeckers frequent the orchards and village trees, Great Grey Shrike winter here and we shall visit a local village favoured by wintering Long-eared Owls! This remarkably ordinary place for some reason attracts up to a hundred Long-eared Owls in just a few trees and we have usually found more than fifty here in the past, with more near the park visitor centre. We'll get great views of them during daylight hours as they rest up, before heading out to hunt in the evening, a fantastic photo opportunity.

Then there are the Woolly Pigs! A short visit to a rare breeds park allows us to see some of the older breeds of farm animals, including these delightful pigs, plus Racka Sheep and the famous Hungarian Grey Cattle, with their incredibly long horns.

5-7 We move on to the Bukk Hills, pausing enroute to search out Saker Falcons and Imperial Eagles. Our delightful hotel has real charm, with every room different and fabulous food as well - especially breakfast which may be the best you'll find anywhere! Nestled in a small village surrounded by wooded slopes, Middle Spotted Woodpecker are in the grounds and Black and Grey-headed Woodpeckers in surrounding woodlands.

Beautiful Beech woodlands nearby are good for Hawfinch, plus Short-toed Treecreeper, Marsh Tit and Nuthatch, with other birds including White-backed Woodpecker also possible. We'll look for lovely White-headed Long-tailed Tits and visit a quarry where Wallcreeper and Alpine Accentor winter - though they are just arriving at this time of year and their presence may depend on the weather in the mountains to the north. Meadows on the tops of the hills are hunting grounds for Ural Owl and we'll try for them at the end of the day.

8 We transfer back to Budapest where we take our return flight to London.
